Also, 27% of students, comment that spread bad rumours or getting pushed by a colleague happens seldom.

It seems that using cell phones or the Internet by a colleague (or making others do it) to say or post hurtful things about them or getting hated on social media by colleagues because of looking or being different, never happens. (about 90% think so).

When some of these situations happens, they usually ask their friends or an adult for help or defend themselves.

By the other hand, they say that very often have seen a colleague making fun or humiliating another, beaten, threatening or kicked out of a group. They never or very seldom have seen a colleague using cell phones or the Internet to say or post hurtful things about them or others or see a colleague putting bad labels of another on social media because of looking or being different.

Finally, the 7% and 6% admit that very often they humiliate or make fun of a colleague and beat a colleague.

About their answers to the question how do they react to the inappropriate attitude of some of their classmates, the 38% says that they will try to talk with the classmate and tell him/her to stop. 29% of student will ask for help to an adult. 13% of students will do nothing and 6% will beat him/her.

They say that school should be more stubborn with the rules. They believe that one of the measures that can be taken is to punish the aggressors, to expel them during a time of the school and to warn the parents. They think that maybe with surveillance cameras in the school and more teachers attentive during the breaks could be a solution.
